I support the idea of going to a 2 license class system. If Element 1 is dropped for the technician class, most new operators will elect to go straight to General class. That is what happened when the no-code tech appeared. New ops took the Novice written, and then the Tech written all in one session, going straight to Tech class. Having only 2 classes with Extra required to show code proficiency is an excellent idea. Amateur Extras are supposed to be the best of the best and should show their knowledge of multiple modes in amateur radio.
